

ONLINE RESOURCES

Compiled by Doug Green
Carlsbad High School, Carlsbad, CA

There are so many wonderful online resources for broadcast journalism teachers and students. Many of the websites cited here are dynamic and ever-changing. If you are looking for models of good storytelling, the links below may be exactly what you are searching for.

1. A Facebook Group for professional broadcast journalists. On this page, media professionals post stories, ask questions, share ideas, tips and tricks. Often they are seeking feedback from colleagues in the industry.
<https://www.facebook.com/groups/TVNewsStroytellers/>
2. Compelling stories produced by the ESPN series E60. These stories feature young people in high interest features and investigative pieces that are well-written, wonderfully-paced and with high production value.
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=0dx1gZPhJAo>
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DgJap_LuJCI
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xe880sipAHg>
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=OIOjYHn_ylg
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-lWJ9ASW_yo
3. National Press Photographer's Association. This link will take you to the NPPA site where they feature the best of the best- award winning stories shot by some of the nation's top photojournalists.
<http://tv.nppa.org/>
4. The Poynter Institute and Al Tompkins have provided STN schools with a wealth of information on issues of ethics and best practice. The Poynter Institute is a valuable resource.
<http://about.poynter.org/>
5. Script Delivery Online Timer. A different kind of website- do your students speak too fast when in front of the camera? This script timer website is designed to measure the amount of words an anchor is speaking per second. We use this to help our students to slow down their script delivery on air. Fun fact: Walter Cronkite trained himself to speak at a pace of just 2.0 words per second. How did he do that? Pauses and breathing.
<http://www.piehole.ie/pages/script-timer>